Opposition To Goethals

We confess to a great deal of surprise at the opposition which has been developed in congress against Colonel Goethals. We had supposed that every one in the United States fully appreciated the great work that be has done, and admired his administrative ability in the doing of that work. There is no question that Colonel Goethals is a great administrator as well as a great builder and engineer. But so much opposition has been developed to his appointment as civil governor of the canal zone that it is probable President Taft will withdraw his nomination. It is an amazing outcome of what was supposed to be a perfectly straightforward and unanimously approved nomination. The idea that the other commissioners are as much entitled to recognition as Colonel Goethals is surely a mere subterfuge. There must be something behind it all that the public does not understand, for indeed the other commissioners have all done their part well, but Colonel Goethals has been the head of It all, and his authority has been supreme. He is the one looked to by the public for the success or failure of the canal enterprise. He has made it a brilliant success, and he is entitled to the credit therefor. Colonel Gorgas, to be sure, by his sanitation work, has made life and health practicable to those who have been engaged in this work, and so far as he is concerned there is no possible criticism, no possible chance for any idea of diminution to his credit. He is a great man in his line; his work undoubtedly has made possible the construction of the canal without disastrous loss of life and within the time set for its complet-Aside from him, however, the public has heard little of the other commissioners. They have doubtless been good routine men, but probably their work has consisted chiefly in agreeing to what Colonel Goethals has proposed and ratifying his conclusions.

There appears to be a disposition to bring Colonel Goethals away from the canal altogether, and he himself is said to have about concluded to resign even before the opening of the canal, so that others can plane themselves in their flory as chief figures in the pomp and display of the opening. For this Colonel Goethals says he does not care, and is wiWing that others shall perform that part; but the opening of the caand without Colonel Goethals having charge of the opening and actually supervising the passage of the first ship through the canal, would be a distinct disappointment to the people of the United States, who recognize that the fitness of things requires the actual supervision of this first passage to be under the special direction of Colonel Goethals.

There is at the same time that this opposition to Colonel Goethals appears in congress, a disposition in that body to give him high rank in the army. But there is no special fitness in this, although it would be a substantial and well-earned reward. But Colonel Goethal's name is inseparably connected with the Panama canal; he ought to be the governor of the Panama canal zone as long as he can be prevailed upon to accept that position, and his supervising hand in the opening work would be of the highest advantage to the country, because he understands the canal more fully than any one else does, and if there should be any hitch, obstruction, or anything barring perfect operation of the canal, Colonel Goethals better than any one else would know precisely what the trouble was and how to apply the remedy. It is unfortunate that there should be this opposition to Colonel Goethals, and it is difficult indeed to understand from what source this opposition arises and upon what it is based.

Public Tackles Parcels Post

Of course, it was inevitable that the parcels post in the beginning of its existence in this country would face all sorts of incongruities, absurdities and perplexities. It was dollars to nothing that the man or woman who never learns anything except by experience would first fall over the glaring bulletins that announce the necessity of securing special stamps for packages, and then would apply the ordinary stamps. It was a practical certainty that the individual who wanted to send a plane by parcels post would appear on the scene, and that the blunderer who never did anything right in his life would attempt to send packages wrapped in manner to make the gods weep. Carlyle described Britons as "mostly tools," and, as we are not destitute of our share of the breed over here, the sort of thing herein suggested was certain to

Nevertheless, the parcels post started with a vim that indicates the tremendous success it is certain to be. If the American people did not very well know how to handle it, noticeable numbers of them did their best to acquire the art. They demonstrated that they were willing and anxious to learn. This is about all that need be desired, for, given that sort of spirit in any people, the rest soon will come. The public recognized that here is a great benefit extending to it, and in a short time it will learn how to use it.

The perspiring postmasters and postmen can comfort themselves with the thought that before long everybody (including themselves) will be "onto the ropes," and then their lot will be a good deal easier than it now is. And as the public learns how to handle it, it is going to appreciate the parcels post more and more.
